GREENSBORO TELEGRAM.

VOL. VII. NO. 127. GREENSBORO, N. C., MONDAY, DECEMBER 31, 1900. Price Five Cents

THE GOING OF THE OLD CENTURY

THE VARIOUS WATCH NIGHT SERVICES OF THE CHURCHES.

Elaborate Programs Arranged to Celebrate the Passing of the Old and the Birth of the New Year and Century.

The old year and the old century will not go out unobserved in Greensboro tonight. The elaborate services that have been arranged for by several of the churches will doubtless be largely attended.

The program of West Market church was announced Saturday. The services will begin at 9:15, and not 9:30, as has been reported. It will be conducted by Rev. J. R. Scroggs, the Presiding Elder.

The watch night service at Spring Garden Sreet Chapel tonignt will commence at 10:45 o'clock and will continue one hour. Several talks will be made and a collection taken to defray the expense of enlarging the chapel, it being inadequate to the needs of the congregation. Rev. Dr. L. W. Crawford will conduct the services.

There will be a meeting in the First Presbyterian church tonight for prayer and praise and reconsecration, beginning at 11 o'clock. All are welcome.

Solemn service will be held at the Catholic church tonight at 12 o'clock, appropriate to the expiration of the nineteenth century and the advent of the twentieth century. At midnight Rev. Father Anthony will celebrate high mass in dedicating the new century and its work to the glory of God. An elaborate and impressive program will be rendered.

The Christmas music which was very successfully produced, is to be repeated. The excellent mass of W. A. Leonard will be sung by the full choir. Mrs. Charles Holt, of Nassau, N. H., will render all the soprana solos and Mr. J. McSorley the baritone solos. Miss Frances O'Brien and Miss Lucy Duffy will sing an alto and tenor solo respectively. Offertory, "Venite Adoremus," by Mrs. Charles Holt and the full choir. After mass Benediction of the Blessed Sacrament is to be given, followed by the "Te Deum." The public generally is invited.

Grace Methodist Protestant church has prepared an interesting program for the Watch-Service to be held in the church tonight, beginning at 10:45. A song service of about fifteen minutes will be the first feature. Following this a part of the service will be devoted to praise and thanksgiving—things to be thankful for.

The second part of the program will be partially devoted to prayer that the Lord of the Harvest will send forth laborers into his vineyard, that there may be among all christians a great awakening and a deepening of the spiritual life and a fuller consecration to service.

A special feature of the service will be the singing just at midnight of Tennyson's "Ring Out Wild Bells," by Mrs. Ernest Teague.

The public is cordially invited to attend this service.

DR. W. C. TYREE CALLED.

Members of the West Washington Street Church Ask the Durham Minister to Become Their Pastor.

The West Washington Street Baptist Church of this city yesterday extended an unanimous call to Rev. Dr. W. C. Tyree, pastor the First Baptist church of Durham, to become its pastor. The committee on pulpit supply, of which Mr. Lee H. Battle was chairman, recommended that Dr. Tyree be called, and said that he had promised to consider the call, and it was the opinion of the committee that he would come. The salary will be $1,500, which is less than Dr. Tyree now gets. Rev. Mr. Johnson spoke in the most eulogistic way of Dr. Tyree, and said that of all the men he knew, he should prefer to be succeeded by Dr. Tyree. The committee was instructed to notify Dr. Tyree of his call. Before making a decision he will visit the church and preach for it once.

Mrs. Fannie Jones, of High Point, is visiting Mrs. Geo. H. Royster on Church street.

QUEEN'S HEALTH PRECARIOUS.

HAS LOST HER APPETITE AND LIVES ON INVALID FOOD.

The Stock Market Has Regained its Steadiness—Notaing Unusual Before One O'clock.

By Wire to The Telegram.

London, Dec. 31.—One of the Queen's household today gave a distressing account of the Queen's health, which naturally suffered a severe shock by the death of her old and intimate friend, Lady Churchill. She has lost her appetite, and endeavors to maintain her strength by the use of patent chemical invalid foods, but her distaste for these is extreme.

MARKET OPENED QUIET.

The London stock market opened without excitement this morning, contrary to expectation, but prices were weak. Brokers are still apprehensive of the results of today's dealings, but no further failures are yet announced.

ITALIAN CRUISER WRECKED.

An unconfirmed rumor reaches here from Rome that the Italian Cruiser Gariddi has been wrecked near the seaport of Massawah, Egypt.

ALL SAFE TILL ONE O'CLOCK.

Fears further of failures in connection with the collapse of the London and Globe finance corporation, limited, were not realized up till one o'clock this afternoon and the whole tone of the stock exchange steadied in consequence. Americans were marked up one-half.

SHOT HIS DOG.

Countryman Took Vengeance That Way on Mr. Luke Glascock.

Saturday Mr. Luke Glascock and some friends were hunting some distance east of town. The dog found a covey of birds on the land of Mr. Robert Holden, whose land was posted. They asked permission to shoot the birds, but were refused. After going some distance the dog again pointed, and the men, thinking they were off Mr. Holden's land, fired. It seems that Mr. Holden was on the watch in the vicinity and shot the dog. This morning Mr. Glascock took out a warrant for Mr. Holden before Esquire Pritchett, on a charge of cruelty to animals. The dog was so badly wounded as will likely make it necessary to kill it.

Miss Trotter Gives a "Tea Test."

Miss Mary Trotter entertained a dozen of her friends Saturday evening at a "tea test," a most delightful occason. The "test"—a guessing contest—furnished much interest and entertainment. Miss May Alderman was presented with a handsome little volume as a reward for her superior skill. Cards with lines of poetry neatly written on them guided the guests to their places at the table, which was burdened with many good things. Those present were: Miss Atwater and Mr. R. H. Brooks; Miss Wheeler and Rev. E. C. Glenn; Miss Vestal and Dr. J. H. Wheeler; Miss Alderman and Mr. L. W. Crawford, Jr.; Miss Smith and Mr. Sidney Peters; Miss Wood and Mr. R. M. Crawford.

Gypsy Moth Hunt Suspended.

The Massachusetts legislature, which was in session nearly all summer, adjourned without making any appropriation to continue warfare on the gypsy moth. Refusal to appropriate funds was based on reports from the regions where the moth hunters operated. Residents regarded the methods employed as most costly and wasteful. The apparatus of the moth commission has been sold at public auction, and the moths will be permitted to take their chances with the ordinary insect destroyers. Some naturalists expect that a parasite will yet destroy the insect that has spread so rapidly for a few years. About $1,000,000 has been spent in pursuing the insect, but a few were left each year to be killed the following year at large expense.

By Wire to The Telegram.

Washington, Dec. 30.—Minister Conger has cabled saying that the Emperor of China has accepted the peace terms in a decree just issued, and that Prince Ching and Li Hung Chang have asked for a further conference. The Emperor, through Prince Ching also asks that the powers stop all military expeditions against the Chinese. This request is in direct line with the wishes of the American government and Minister Conger has been instructed that it is the wish of this government to stop as soon as possible the slaughter of Chinese by the military. Our soldiers have taken no part in these military excursions, which apparently are confined to the Russians and Germans.

My Daughter-in-Law.

The play given Saturday night, "My Daughter-in-Law," in which Miss Marion Convere played the leading role, has attracted more attention than any other that has appeared this season. This was due, of course, to the local interest in Miss Jones. The play is quite as good as the reputation that preceeded it. Miss Jones plays with a spirit and freshness that is charming, and what is very important, she is most admirably supported by her company. The manager is trying to make a return date.

SEVERE FLOODS IN ENGLAND.

ABNORMAL SNOW STORMS AND RAINS DOING MUCH DAMAGE.

Many Towns Are Submerged Three or Four Feet Deep—The Avon Already Ten Feet Higher Than Normal.

By Wire to The Telegram.

London, Dec. 31—Abnormal snow storms, heavy rains and severe gales have done much damage in many parts of the country. There have been disastrous floods, landslips and washout. On all sides much stock has been drowned. Railroads and highways are blocked, buildings and bridges carried away and miles of country inundated, while rains have submerged the streets of some towns three or four feet.

A number of factories are flooded in Conventry. Hundreds of the inhabitants are imprisoned in their homes. The town of Bath is endangered by the rise of the Avon, which is now ten feet above the normal. Many villages are altogether isolated.

THE HISTORY OF GUILFORD.

The Work Now on Hand by Miss Stockard Will be a Notable and Valuable One.

To the Editor of The Telegram:

The history of this county now being written by Miss Sallie W. Stockard will be a large slice of the historical life of this State. For Guilford county is cosmopolitan and the most typical North Carolina county. Very truly our American life began with the planting of Guilford county and with her brave hearted farmers who dared to shake the fist of defiance in the face of British oppressive authority. Guilford was the hot bed of the Regulation movement. As well as this, her schools and colleges, which have always stood first, her great industrial life, and her activity along all lines for civilization, tell for the life that is back of them, speak for her manhood which gave being.

The History of Guilford County was begun last September. Since that time Miss Stockard has spared no pains to come at the facts and much valuable and rare historical material has fallen into her hands. A great amount of this data cannot be duplicated. Her book will give reference and authority in all particulars.

The good people of Guilford—just as they should—because they understand and appreciate it—have been giving this young lady every encouragement and assistance in this noble endeavor; and the work promises to be one of especial merit.

If Miss Stockard has not yet called on you to be taught the knowledge of Guilford county and its history, she is on trail, so keep your mind a simmering, watch, and be ye also ready. What is better—a good many have done so—come forward without asking. Show your patriotism and be true to Guilford history. We, as a county, are over one hundred years old, and there is in our history an individual life, unique in the architecture of American history.

Miss Stockard's work will be organic in its structure, to note the heart-throbs of our life, to show its being and development. All these things have made us what we are.

Miss Stockard is a young woman of great energy and most liberal education. Five years of her life were spent at Guilford College, where, after most rigid mental gymnastics with Greek and Latin and mathematics she was grauated in 1897. Since which, she has spent much time at the University of North Carolina, where she received the degree of Master of Arts in June, 1900.

DEATH OF JUDGE FAIRCLOTH

DIED SUDDENLY SATURDAY NIGHT IN GOLDSBORO.

Had Just Taken a Bath and Put on His Night Robe Preparatory to Going to Bed. When Summons Came.

Special to the News and Observer.

Goldsboro, N. C., Dec. 29.—Chief Justice William T. Faircloth died suddenly at his home in this city tonight about ten o'clock. He had taken a bath, and the attack came on him just as he had put on his night robe preparatory to going to bed. He hastened to lie down upon the lounge and his wife saw that his condition was critical. The neighbors and his physician were hastily summoned, but he was dead before they arrived. In fact he expired in a moment or two after reaching the lounge. His neighbors came in quickly, applied restoratives and did what they could, but it was too late for human assistance, and it was soon apparent that life was extinct.

There is a deep regret in this community at the sudden death of the Chief Justice. He has lived here many years and long been identified with its professional and business life. He was one of the wealthiest men in the place, a director in the Bank of Wayne, interested in other enterprises, and the owner of five blocks of real estate in the city. He was a consistent and leading member of the Baptist church, and was a liberal contributor to all its institutions and enterprises. The arrangements for the funeral have not yet been made.

Judge Faircloth was born in Greene county. He was a graduate of Wake Forest College, of which he was a trustee at the time of his death. He volunteered in the Confederate service and was Quarter Master of the Second North Carolina regiment when Gen. Lee surrendered. After the war he settled at Goldsboro, where he always had a large and lucrative practice. He was a man of sound business judgment and his investments made him a rich man. The late Henry F. Grainger, Esq., was his law partner, and he was afterwards a law partner of ex-Judge Wm. R. Allen, of Goldsboro.

In 1875 or 1876, Governor Brogden appointed Judge Faircloth to a position as Associate Justice of the Supreme Court. He held that position until the Democratic victory of 1878. In 1884 he was the Republican candidate for Lieutenant Governor but was defeated by Major Chas. M. Stedman. In 1894 he was the Fusion candidate for Chief Justice and was elected by a large majority. His term began January 1, 1859, and would have expired December 31, 1902.

Judge Faircloth was a consistent and life-long Republican, the first man of his party every way in Eastern North Carolina. He was man of personal integrity, and in politics was the best and most respected man in the Republican party. He was a safe and studious lawyer, and had that deliberation and research that befits the judicial officer.

THE CENTRE OF THE COUNTY.

Mr. Armfield Was Told Years Ago That the Spot Was in the Rear of Caldcleugh's Store.

To the Editor of The Telegram:

I have just read Major Morehead's statement regarding the location of Greensboro, and agree with him in all except what he says regarding the geographical centre of the county, and will give my authority.

When Holston Brothers built their "new store," as it was called, now occupied by Wharton Brothers, they purchased the lot, I think, from Mr. Lyndon Swaim. On the lot was a small brick building, known as the "Patriot Office," which they tore away. I was present when the last of it was being moved, and I remember that Mr. Swaim was then waiting to see to the laying out of the foundation, at the time being the only architect Greensboro had. While the crowd was waiting, Mr. Swaim remarked that we were very near the centre of the county. He then pointed to a spot a few feet in the rear of Caldcleugh's store and said that at the time the survey was made, that there was a duct in that locality, extending across Elm street, taking in the ground from Scott's store to the Benbow Hall, and for that reason the surveyors went on top of the hill and located the court-house.

POKER AND DRINK LEAD TO BAD

EXPLANATION OF YOUNG MYERS' ATTEMPT AT SUICIDE.

He Took $1,800 in Cash and Checks Aggregating $4,000 From the Charlotte Express Office and Gambled Away the Cash in Columbia and Then Took Laudanum.

Charlotte Observer, Sunday.

Joel J. Myers, an employe of the Southern Express Company in this city, who tried to commit suicide in Columbia, S. C., Friday, has made a full and sensational confession of his robbery of the Express Company.

The Observer received the following by telephone from Columbia last night:

"When young Myers, the money order clerk of the Charlotte Southern Express Company's office came to his senses during the forenoon today, the mystery of the appearance upon his person of the three checks aggregating about $4,000, was solved. He gave the explanation, making a clean breast of everything leading to his downfall and attempt at suicide, revealing the facts that he had taken the checks and $1,800 in cash from the office where he was employed up to December 5th, when he voluntarily resigned his position. The story he told also shows that the case was one of the saddest ones that ever occurred in the South. It was one telling of the leading astray of a worthy young man by evil associates, the quickstep to drunkenness, the entering of gambling houses on to the dwelling of immoral sense, then robbery, and, finally, when the last card had been played, to the attempt at self-destruction. Indeed, the story was one more calculated to excite the pity rather than the resentment of fellow-men.

"The young man is so overcome by the realization of what he has done that he is now quite sick in his room, where officers are with him to prevent any further attempt at suicide. He seems to have no desire to escape.

"Before going to Charlotte young Myers, who is a member of a prominent family in this State, worked for about one year as money order clerk here. He so won the esteem of his employers that he was promoted to the position in the Charlotte office. The officials today said that they had regarded him as one of their best men. Sometime in November he struck up with a bad set and began to drink and gamble on the quiet.

"Time wore on and on the night of December 3rd a Southern Railway remittance came in from Union, S. C. He took the package and, wisely, the way bill also. The next night another package came from the same point. These packages contained, one, two checks and the other, one check; and both of them had cash in them, aggregating $1,800. He knew it was the holiday rush season and that they could not be checked up for some time. On the 5th inst., he voluntarily resigned his position. Then he began to plunge indeed for a few days in Charlotte and lost about $200 in gambling, according to his own story. Then he came to Columbia and lost some more money here. In a few days he went to his home, in another part of the State, to spend Christmas. He kept the checks and packages, the latter being absolutely intact save for the broken seals. He had them in his valise. He says that upon sobering up he realized what he had done and his purpose was to get to Columbia, win enough money in this city to replace the cash and take the packages back to the express company.

"Myers struck Columbia's five gambling houses and dollar after dollar went.

"Early Thursday morning he found himself crazed with drink with only $15 left. He went to the hotel but met some gamblers who urged him to go out and start a game. All the time, to the very last, it seems, he hoped to win back the money. Shortly before the two gentlemen who saw him with the laudanum interested themselves in his condition, leading to the unexpected and peculiar discovery of the theft, the young man had gotten back to the hotel with only 45 cents of the original $1,800 and the bottle of laudanum with which he intended to end his life.

"He believes that he lost in this city no less that $1,600 of the stolen money. The Southern Express Company loses nothing, as the young man had a bond still in force in the surety company, which covers the loss. The Express Company will not prosecute in the circumstances of the case. In no event could any loss have occurred to the shippers or the company as discovery and capture were inevitable.

"A representative of the surety company is now on the way here. It is not known whether prosecution will follow or not. While no form of arrest has been made the young man is guarded by an officer in his room at the hotel to prevent him from destroying himself. His valise and papers and the checks are in the safe at the hotel. The unexpected discovery of the checks in the manner heretofore described makes the case one of the most remarkable and peculiar ones ever chronicled in either real life or fiction."

is where we stand in the lumber business. At the kicking spot, as it were, in regard to prices.

First comes the owner of the timber. He just woke up to the value of it and wants double last year's prices. Then the sawmill man. He has not been making a fortune and thinks now he should share a little in the general prosperity

They say to us: "We must have so much for our trees and work." After a while it is "up to you." Don't kick. You don't suppose we have nerve enough to put up prices unless they had first been put up on us. No, indeed. But prices are NOT high. They have been to low and are just now getting reasonable. Your children will be glad to build at double the price it now costs you. It is a trite, but true saying, if you want to build, "Now is the time."

The Jewels of Jane Jardine

"TO SELL yourself," cried Margaret Farrar, a strong ring of indignation in her voice, "for a handful of colored stones—Jane, I can't think it of you!"

"Don't, then!" advised Jane, with laconic impertinence.

"To think of how hard Stuart has worked all these years!" went on the elder sister. "And now that he writes he has a good position as civil engineer in the government service, and is coming home to claim you, you decide to fling him aside like a—a—" She floundered for a comparison. "Like an old-fashioned hat," she supplemented.

Jane, crouching in supine comfort on the wide window seat of the bay window in the morning room, lifted her beautiful brows in apologetic remonstrance.

"You serious old goose! All the civil engineering—whatever that may be—that poor, dear Stuart will ever do won't be worth at the end of a laborious existence a fourth of the colored stones to which you so contemptuously refer."

"And will all the jewels that ever were dug out of the earth's heart compensate for the loss of the love of a man like Stuart Cameron?"

Margaret held suspended the gleaming needle she had been plying in repair of the silken hose of her winsome and indolent young sister.

The latter pouted bewitchingly. "He is so good!" she acknowledged, with just a hint of remorse. "But he's too good for me. I'm afraid I'm essentially and ridiculously frivolous, Margaret. Stuart should have fallen in love with you in the first place." When she had said this Jane Farrar was more nearly dismayed and disconcerted than she had ever been in all her happy 20 years of love, and praise, and adulation.

For Margaret, letting fall the little ebony, silver-handled mender in its rosy sheath she was repairing, looked at her younger sister in reproach and indignation. "You must never speak to me like that again, Jane. Never!"

"Why—Margaret!"

Margaret was white as she would be shrouded.

"Never mind why—only don't!" Then she rose abruptly, dropping her hose, silks, darning materials, and hastily left the room.

"The dear—old—thing!"

Jane Farrar clasped her hands over her head. The folds of her imported kimona billowed around her in waves of gold embroidered azure. Her pretty face smiled from its tangle of blond tresses. Her round arms gleamed like marble when the loose, wide sleeves of the land of the cherry blossoms fell away, revealing their loveliness.

Mary Burns came in just then—a rather scrawny Scotch girl, with possibilities of exquisite physical development.

"We're going out to the park, and we want you and Margaret to come with us—where is Margie?"

Jane's gentle laugh shook her perfect shoulders. "Echo answers, where," she said, sweetly. "If you will look at that stocking basket you will observe that Margie has been here and has but lately fled. Mary," curling around into an attitude of catlike comfort, "why do old maids always darn stockings?"

"Because young maids are too selfish to do that or anything else useful," replied Mary Burns, tartly.

Jane laughed gleefully. "Fancy," she said, "Margaret calling me to account—me! She cannot understand how or why I should let Stuart Cameron make personal arrangements in which I am included. But that is just what he must do, because—"

"Because of Edward Jardine, Jane?"

Jane meditated, her slim hands clasped behind her head and her eyes provokingly introspective.

"I think because of Edward Jardine's family jewels," she said slowly.

"You're not as mercenary as that!"

Jane made a little move. "Mercenary! I dislike the word. But the Jardine jewels would make any woman avaricious. You've heard of them, Mary?"

"A lot," returned Mary, brusquely. "More than I shall tell you now."

Jane laughed leniently and flung a spool of discarded darning cotton at the pink-nosed kitten.

"I must have them," she declared. "I dream of them. I want to handle them—to wear them. Fancy strings of turquoise blue as a robin's egg. Imagine a necklace of blue-red rubies. Dream of emeralds greener than the greenest depths of the ocean. Diamonds more brilliant than—"

Mary Burns cut short the rush of fluent comparisons. "Then you're going to marry the Jardine jewels, Jane?"

"I really think I shall. Why, what is the matter, Mary?"

For Mary was laughing—laughing annoyingly and mysteriously. "O, nothing!" she said. But she kept on laughing off and on all the way home.

So Jane, with a sigh for splendid Stuart Cameron, married the insignificant little man of "cribbed, canined and confined" mentality and of a nature that was not only shallow but coarse. He resented her early inquiry about the Jardine jewels.

"One would fancy you had only married me for those," he said, suspiciously. "I can't produce them for a year. There are certain reasons they must stay where they are."

It was Margaret Farrar who met Stuart Cameron when, gay, eager, expectant, he stepped from the train.

"Jane!" He glanced quickly around.

Margaret winced, but she held herself well in hand.

"Stuart! I must speak with you."

"I don't know how I can tell you," she went on, when they were wandering down a lane profligate in midsummer effulgence of bloom and beauty. "But—Jane is married—married to Ed Jardine."

He saw the pleasant countryside as one distorted green blur. The sun was a prancing ball of copper.

"Margie! Is this true? What influenced her?"

"She was young," the sister said, defensively. "She loved beautiful things. She had heard so much of the Jardine jewels—'"

"Ah!" he said." A flush of intelligence irradiated his face. "Then she did not know—"

"Know what?"

"Never mind now. Margaret, could you care for me?"

She was too true a woman to prevaricate. "Yes," she said, "but you must not speak to me now. If—when you know me better—"

He turned, looking into the grave, gentle face, where the unselfish love of many years blossomed forth for the first time.

"I must have been blind," he said, slowly; "blind!"

He would have taken her in his arms, but she smiled back in his eyes and shook her head.

"Wait until you are sure you see," she whispered, blushing.

They had been married more than a year when Jane Jardine swept down on their pretty home in a whirlwind of fury.

"Margaret," she flared out, "the Jardine jewels were sold with the family plate by old Scott Jardine. Those in the local bank are only paste duplicates, which Ed's father had made when he disposed of the genuine. Did you know about it? Mary Burns said she did." She had to pause, so breathless was she with rage. "Ed only laughs. He says it serves me right—he says sham jewels are good enough for me—he—"

She broke off, crimson with wrath.

"I've known for ages, Jane." Stuart Cameron jauntily swung his sturdy boy out of his wife's arm. "Rob Burns told me about it before I went abroad."

"Take off your hat, Jane!" urged Margaret. "Stay to supper with us!"

Jane cast a grim glance around the place. The athletic engineer, with his son set on his shoulder—the happy mother in the dainty gown, the gay little domicile itself, which was less a house than a home—

"I'd better not." Suddenly she seemed to see Ed Jardin's sullen, befuddled countenance—to hear his taunting remark anent her disappointment. "Ed would swear. Although, for the matter of that," she muttered between the hysterical gusts of melancholy laugh, "he will swear anyhow.

When she had gone laggingly away the eyes of husband and wife met.

"Poor Jane! Even if the Jardine jewels were genuine they could not make her a happy woman."

"It's an ill wind that blows nobody good." Cameron's smile of lingering tenderness brought the pretty color rushing to her cheeks. "I'm glad she admired them when she did—as deeply as she did. Beloved, you know—"

MONDAY, DECEMBER 31

THE NINETEENTH CENTURY.

This day closes the greatest century that the world has ever seen. No single century has done so much toward making the world physically a more desirable dwelling place for man, nor gone so far in making it possible for him to live a larger, better and fuller life. From a standpoint of mere accomplishment more has been achieved than in all the eighteen preceding Christian centuries. Every field of human thought and activity has been revolutionized, and in some of them the experience of the past has been worthless, or valuable only in the exercise required to utterly discredit the antecedent work. And, unlike any preceding one, this century closes with, we are optimistic enough to believe, a distinctly altruistic spirit.

Perhaps the most uprooting changes have occurred in scientific and religious thought. The wonderful changes wrought by the discovery of steam and electricity have not been even suggestively paralelled by anything except those following in the wake of the invention of gunpowder. But beyond these in the revolutionizing of thought has been the discovery of the principle of evolution. With it science discarded the past and began at a new starting point. With this new theory of the universe ringing in men's ears they had little time for listening to the postulates of dogmatism in the matter of religion, and the theological fabric built on the assumption that the world was six thousand years old, fell. It cannot be denied that as radical a revolution in religious thought has begun in the world at large as the one that has occurred in science. The whole theory of God and his relation to the universe which prevailed at the beginning of the century has so far changed as to make it impossible that the old one will ever again be universal.

This century, above all the others, has seen the establishment of the principle of democracy. The greatest manifestation of this principle may be seen in education and in politics. Its growth in education has been a corollary of its establishment in politics When absolutism failed in France, anarchy reigned, and when Napoleon bridled anarchy he prepared the way for democracy. His own absolutism was merely an incident, and by the middle of the century representative institutions were established in Germany, France, Italy and Spain. In America the people have always ruled in theory, but both here and in England, by the extension of practically universal suffrage, they have, during this century, learned to rule absolutely. When class rule vanished, class education followed it, and one of the most cordial objects of government and philanthropy now is the education of all the people that they may be more cultured, efficient and powerful.

The inventions that have revolutionized industry have brought corresponding changes in sociology. The congestion of population into cities and industrial centres has been due to the changes wrought by machinery. When these movements began the evil caused by the lack of sanitation and labor laws and by oppression, was unmitigated. This is not so today. Labor is more powerful now than it has ever been in the world's history. It lives better and more comfortably. Not only has involuntary servitude through chattel slavery been wiped out in all civilized countries of the world, but free labor has become more dignified, better paid, and in every way better able to enjoy the blessings of this earth than ever before. There is much yet to be done. To quote a current writer, "There have, indeed, been several marked periods of reaction, but, taken as a whole, the Nineteenth Century has been almost as marked as the era of the Reformation for the awakening sense of the essential equality in political and industrial rights of all the children of men."

Let us be thankful for the results of the Nineteenth Century. The world is far from perfect, but it is better than it has ever been. Let us take grate ful farewell of the old and hopefully greet the new.

The Associated Press said that ex-President Cleveland had written a letter for the New York World of yesterday, advocating the election of president by a popular vote and the extention of the term of office. This must be one of the World's fakes, or the Old Man's memory is shorter than we had supposed. The World is the paper that he a few years ago characterized as a common liar, or words to that effect.

That the Greensboro merchants have done a splendid business during the holiday trade would be sufficiently evidenced by their hearty thanks and newyear greetings now being extended by them. There is no doubt that the holiday trade was better than any ever before done in the town.

To the many other advantages so often ascribed to being poor may be added that the fact that the millionaires are suffering from the fear of kidnappers, while the poor man and his hopeful son can lie down to sleep with the utmost assurance that they will wake up at the same place.

CHINESE GOVERNMENT.

The Emperor Is Indeed an Absolute Monarch Under His Mother.

The Chinese system of government, it is obvious, has some marked weaknesses, says ex-Minister Angell, in Atlantic. The emperor is indeed an absolute monarch, whose duty as the Son of Heaven is to care for his subjects. He is asissted by councils and boards, composed of able men drawn from various parts of the empire. He has also a board of censors, whose duty is to criticise officials of any grade. They frequently evince great frankness and courage, and their power is dangerous because great. But even they are sometimes overpowered by their opponents and degraded.

Under a strong emperor the government is strong and is not ill adapted to the needs of the people. Under a weak emperor the palace is so constantly a center of intrigue between contending factions, and the imperial power is so little felt in the provinces, that the government is inefficient. Owing to the filial regard which the emperor must always cherish for his mother, the empress dowager, if a strong and ambitious woman, may wield great power. When I was in Peking, in 1880, the emperor was a child and was under the control of the two empresses dowager. It was said that they sat invisible behind a curtain, where they conferred with the ministers of state. So the saying was current that China was ruled by a baby and two old women behind a curtain.

How the Fuss Started.

"That "hand-me-down suit you're wearing," remarked Rivers, "reminds me of an unripe watermelon."

"Why?" asked Brooks.

"Because it's so different. One isn't out to fit, and the other isn't fit to cut."

It was then that Brooks plugged away at him.—Boston Herald.

PULLED BY THREE HORSES.

Every Russian gentleman of wealth or noble lineage goes driving in a manner peculiar to his nationality—with three horses abreast, attached to a fashionable "troika," a vehicle wholly dissimilar to the carriages used in other countries, but answering the same purpose. The two flanking horses canter, with their heads turned outward, the middle horse trots with clean, high steps and looking straight before him, all going at a furious speed, steered by a stout driver, preposterously padded. This is a turnout that delights the heart of the wealthy, luxury-loving Russian of conservative ideas, says a London paper.

The dooga, or characteristic wooden arch which passes over the central horse's shoulders, is fixed to the ends of the shafts to hold them in position, while the outer ends are attached, not rigidly to a splinter bar as in ordinary carriages, but to the ends of the front axletree. Cumbersome as this method looks, it has the advantage of applying the draught at the most advantageous angle, considering the rough roads and streets.

Fashion in Russia decrees that the middle horse must trot at its highest speed, while the other horses canter or gallop. A side vein is used to make the outside horses turn their heads outward, so that they shall keep time, and lead with the inward leg.

The ordinary whip is never employed by the Russian driver of a troika. When a whip is used it is a short-handled affair called a nagaika, with a long lash like a dog whip, but this is plied only when the horse is to be punished severely. The usual method for stimulating a horse is to hit him with the little knob of metal which is attached to each rein about half way between the horse's mouth and the driver's hands.

The Russian coachman is extraordinarily fat in appearance. This, however, is mainly due to a liberal padding of cotton wadding, with which the koocher fortifies himself against the biting cold of the climate.

To be very fashionable the Russian must be driven by a non-Russian coachman. The chief coachman to his imperial highness the czar is a one-eyed Italian named Notto, whose brother drives for Grand Duke Paul. Many Englishmen find employment in Russian stables, and a number of Americans earn large salaries by working for Russian trotting men. In European countries the Anglo-Saxon is held in high admiration as a horseman. The owner of the largest horseshoeing establishment in St. Petersburg is an Englishman.

DISCOVERY OF KHAKI.

First Production of the Cloth Which Clothes English and American Soldiers.

The London Daily News, to illustrate the part played by lucky accident in the discovery of inventions, told the other day a story about khaki, the olive-colored canvas cloth worn by the English and American soldiers in hot countries.

This cotton stuff has been worn in India by British troops for many years. Its tint was a greenish brown, but it always faded when it was washed with soap.

A business man from Manchester, while traveling in India, happened to fall into conversation with an English officer, who remarked, carelessly, that the first manufacturer who could produce a cotton drill that would not fade would make his fortune.

The young Englishman never forgot this hint. He came home, found a skillful dyer, and with him began the search for an olive dye which, when used on cotton cloth, would not yield to soap or soda. They spent years in these experiments, all of which proved fruitless.

One day they found among several scraps of dyed cloth one which retained its color under the most severe tests. The puzzling fact was that it had been cut from the same piece of cloth, and subjected to the same processes as the other scraps, all of which faded.

The two experimenters were greatly puzzled, and for months tried in vain to solve the riddle. The one little fragment of khaki was the only one which kept its color against all attacks.

By chance one day they found that the dye in which this scrap had been dipped had remained for a time in a metal dish of a peculiar kind. The secret was found. The metal of the dish, in combination with the chemicals of the dye, had furnished the one thing needful. They tried the experiment with other pieces. The dye held, and their fortunes were made.

It was not chance which gave them their success, but the indomitable patience and persistence which pursued the chance, and the intelligence which seized it.

BLOODY AFFAIR IN ABBEVILLE

DRUNKEN FOOL KILLS TWO MEN AND IS HIMSELF KILLED.

Shot an Inoffensive Man in the Hotel and Then the Sheriff Who Attempted to Arrest Him.

Special to Charlotte Observer.

Charleston, S. C., Dec. 30.—Three men were killed in Abbeville, this State, last night as the result of a drunken man's spleen and malice. Two of them were the sheriff of the county, and a highly respected Northerner, Wm. Kyle, of Massachusetts, who has been superintending the building of a cotton mill in Abbeville. They were playing cards for pinders at the hotel, when John Dansby, a notorious gambler and ex-United States marshal, threw $2 on the table and said: "Play for this." This was refused and an altercation ensued. Dansby suddenly drew a 45-calibre revolver and shot Kyle in the abdomen to the amazement of all present. He then backed out of the room declaring that he would shoot any man who attempted to stop him.

Dansby was followed by two policemen, but held them at bay with his pistol until Sheriff Kennedy and a number of citizens arrived. The Sheriff called, to Dansby to come out of the house of his father-in-law, whither he had fled, and surrender. Densby came out closing the door behind him, and with the remark, "Well, we'll all go to hell together," commenced firing. Dansby was shot twice in the leg and full in the chest, the sheriff was struck once in the left breast near the heart and fell as soon as hit. Dansby walked some 50 steps and was reloading his pistol when he was shot again, some say by the dying sheriff. The sheriff and his slayer died within a few minutes. Kyle lingered until 2 o'clock today.

Bob Kennedy was a most popular man. He leaves a wife and one child. The two men and their wives were reared in the same community and all were friends.

CHILDREN MOVED BY BURGLARS.

Little Girls Had to be Carried from One Bed to Another Before a Closet Could be Opened.

New York Sun, 29th.

A burglar entered the apartments of Harry Babchin, over his jewelry store at 24 Newark avenue, Jersey City, about 2 o'clock yesterday morning and located a clothes closet behind the bed in which Mr. Babchin's daughters, Lillian, 8 years old, and Sylvia, 5 years old, were sleeping. He lifted Lillian in his arms, carefully wrapped a blanket about her and carried her into a front room, where he placed her on a sofa. The child awoke, and the burglar quieted her fears by saying: "Go to sleep, dear, it's only papa." Then he sat at the foot of the sofa until the little girl fell asleep.

Returning to the children's chamber he transferred Sylvia to a folding bed on the opposite side of the room, without awaking Mrs. Bobchin's servant girl, who was sleeping in it. Then he moved the empty bed away from the door of the clothes closet and made up a big bundle of the children's best clothes. While he was tying a string around the bundle little Sylvia awoke, and finding that she was in the folding bed with the servant cried out that she wanted to sleep in her own bed. Mrs. Babchin was awakened by the child's protests and hurried in to investigate. The burglar heard her coming and decamped without taking the clothes with him.

Before entering the children's room the thief stole $5 from the pockets of Mr. Babchin's trousers, which he found at the side of the jeweler's bed in an adjoining room. He also confiscated 50 cents which he discovered in seven-year old Leo Babchin's clothes. The reserves from the first precinct police station were hunting for the burglar within a few minutes after he escaped, but could find no trace of him. He got into the house by climbing through a window in the rear of the jewelry store.

GLORIOUS NEWS

Comes from Dr. D. B. Cargile, of Washita, I. T. He writes: "Four bottles of Electric Bitters has cured Mrs. Brewer of scrofula, which had caused her great suffering for years. Terrible sores would break out on her head and face, and the best doctors could give no help: but her cure is complete and her health is excellent." This shows what thousands have proved,—that Electric Bitters is the best blood purifier known. It's the supreme remedy for eczema, tetter, salt rheum, ulcers, boils and running sores. It stimulates liver, kidneys and bowels, expels poisons, helps digestion, builds up the strength. Only 50 cents. Sold by C. E. Holton, druggist. Guaranteed.

8085—Infants' Tucked Slip.
One size.

INFANTS' TUCKED SLIP, NO. 8035.

This simple little slip is developed in fine white nainsook and is devoid of the lace, ribbon and other decorations usually found on infant's wear.

It is adjusted with shoulder and under-arm seams and fastens in the back with tiny pearl buttons. The fullness is arranged in clusters of tucks back and front which are stitched down a short distance to simulate a square yoke. The neck is finished with a a narrow band surmounted by a ruffle of the nainsook. The lower edge of the slip is turned up in a deep hem.

The one-piece sleeves are made in bishop style, drawn in at the wrist with elastic run through the hem which forms a narrow ruffle over the hand.

Dainty slips may be developed in lawn, swiss or cambric, and narrow embroidery used around the neck and sleeves if a more dressy effect is desired.

To make the slip for an infant will require two and one-half yards of thirty-six-inch material. The pattern, No. 8085, is cut in one size.

MERRITT, BROWER AND COMPANY : : :

A CARD.

To the Public:—A large number of the best business people insured in the Aetna Life Insurance Company at the low prices, for 1900, which ended last week, and now hold policies in one of the best companies at a lower rate than can be gotten in the future.

Those who said "not today—see me tomorrow," have lost a golden opportunity by trusting that old and renowned thief—procrastinationr You would better take hold promptly when the Aetna Band Wagon passes your way again. W. W. Wood will handle the reins again next year. If you get aboard he will land you safely on the twentieth century new policies and new pricos that will be up-to-date in all respects.

To the many policy holders who favored him with their business he is profoundly grateful and congratulates them upon having written on the low rates in the closing century.

He now invites the public attention to the new policies, the new year, and the new century, wishing abundant and abiding prosperity to all mankind.

THE WEATHER.

For North Carolina: Fair, much colder tonight and Tuesday, freezing temperature night to the coast, fresh west winds.

Highest temperature, in Greensboro, for past 24 hours, ending eight o'clock this morning, 52; lowest 35, rainfall .46. Highest temperature on Saturday last 41, lowest Saturday night 32, rainfall Saturday .07.

LOCAL ITEMS.

The Epworth League of West Market church will meet tonight at 8 o'clock.

The continued services at the First Presbyterian Church will begin next week instead of this week.

Master Robert, the nine-year-old son of Mr. W. O. Stratford, who has been quite sick with pneumonia, is improving.

A number of students of the A. & M. College in Raleigh were here today returning from spending the holidays at home. This institution opens Wednesday, as does also Whitsett Institute and Trinity College, and the University will open on Thursday.

We have before remarked about the number and beauty of the calendars that Greensboro firms have gotten out as new year advertisements. Several more have come out since, among them those of the Southern Sweet Gum Company, the most unique of all; the Gate City Steam Laundry, a very beautiful one; Merritt, Brower & Co., Mr. J. T. Bass, the Virginia Life Insurance Company, J. B. Fariss, and Murray Bros.

Messrs. J. H. Rankin, and Robert G. Glenn, we are informed, state that in or about the year 1860, there were two pictures of the late Rev. E. W. Caruthers, without hats, hanging in the home of the late Mrs. Anna Forbis Gilmer, widow of Robert Gilmer, about three miles southeast of Alamance church. Can Messrs. J. H. Phipps or Lindsey or Samuel Stewart, or any other one inform The Telegram where either of these pictures is today? Will they hunt them up if possible and thereby confer a great favor on the Battle Ground Company, as the latter wishes to reproduce them?

The One Day Cold Cure.
